To report the first case of nosocomial infection caused by vancomycin-resistant enterococci (VRE) in a patient with diabetes mellitus. A 73-year-old woman, with a past history of left mastectomy for breast cancer and diabetes mellitus, was admitted to a ward in a university hospital. During her hospitalization, she developed multiple colonization of the stool and urine, along with a painful skin lesion. Cultures of blood and cultures of infected skin lesions were positive for VRE. Treatment with vancomycin was started empirically for wound infection. After a few days of treatment, VRE bacteremia was detected, and the treatment was switched to teicoplanin. Enterococci with identical pulsed-field gel electrophoresis patterns of SmaI-digested chromosomal DNA were isolated from the blood, wound culture, and urine. These enterococci showed vancomycin resistance and had a molecular size of 29.5 megadaltons (Mda). A panresistant VRE strain was isolated from the patient's blood. The blood, wound, and urinary isolates were genetically related. Although vancomy
