The invention is a further development of the connector described in my earlier patent application SE-A-9802027-0 and the invention is described in greater detail hereinbelow. The object of the invention is to provide a connector that does not require a hinge pin or other removable part that has to be handled with care in order to prevent it from being lost or damaged in the environment, and that has a small space requirement to facilitate fitting. The connector in accordance with the invention has the advantage that a hinge pin that is intended to act as a locking member can be a part of the connector itself. Thus, the need for an external pin and for some kind of support to keep the external pin securely in place when it is being used as a locking member is eliminated. Furthermore, the connector according to the invention has the advantage that a locking member can be brought to bear on the outside of the connector and hence the locking member does not need to be located inside the connector so as to be less visible. Consequently, the connector in accordance with the invention is more attractive and is also easier to install than known connectors. The connector can also be easily dismantled for removal of the pipes or pipes to be connected. Furthermore, the connector in accordance with the invention does not require a hinge pin for locking the pipes or pipes in a working position, since the locking member can be a part of the connector itself. The connector in accordance with the invention is characterized in that the locking member is a part of the body that is pressed against a pipe or pipes to be connected. Consequently, the locking member has no room in the connector to move or to be displaced during fitting of the pipes or pipes. The pipes or pipes to be connected are forced to move during the pressing-together process 2d92ce491b
