But my problem is i want to hide the content of the html file which is displayed. I need to perform many actions on the basis of the content of the html file. The response will be display in the next activity. i have try to do it by creating a new android application. In the new application i have added a custom webview in which i have add my custom html page. Then i can hide the content of the page. But i want to hide in the same activity. How can i do this? Thanks in advance.. A: You can use a WebView for a custom HTML. But there are other ways as well. It is always a good idea to have a look at the ContentManager API: The Android 3.2 (API level 17) documentation introduced the Content Manager API, which allows developers to programmatically manage content providers and their activities. A content provider is an Android application that can be used to create a unified access point for data. This API provides direct access to the data and content inside the data. You can find some examples here: Read this as well: "Content Versus Content Providers" Hope this helps. Why should we celebrate Pi Day?
