Webserver: $2,000,000 of the $3,000,000 policy. In its instructions to the jury, the district court set out the following essential facts to be considered by the jury: (1) that the premium was paid and the policy was issued for a definite period of time; (2) that the insured was given the right to cancel the policy within 10 days of its issuance; and (3) that the insured did not exercise that right to cancel within the allotted period. After these facts were submitted to the jury, the district court then instructed the jury on the question of cancellation. The court's instructions essentially mirrored those contained in the model instructions. See Ninth Circuit Model Instruction 4.18 (1990). 11 In providing the jury with the facts necessary to decide whether the insurance policy was properly cancelled, the district court instructed the jury that "[i]f a policy is canceled in accordance with its terms, there is no coverage," and then defined what the terms of the policy required. The district court also instructed the jury on the effect of the failure to pay the insurance premium. See id. at 4.19. The district court did not give any instruction or mention the fact of compliance with the agent's directions in directing the jury to decide whether the insured failed to pay the premium. 12 The jury was instructed in accordance with the applicable law as contained in the model instructions and as set out in the court's instructions. The jury was provided with the facts necessary to decide the question before it, and the instruction itself set out the law applicable to the issue. The district court did not err in declining to give the instruction proposed by St. Paul. 13 The judgment of the district court is AFFIRMED. * This disposition is not appropriate for publication and may not be cited to or by the courts of this circuit except as provided by Ninth Circuit Rule 36-3 LAS VEGAS (Reuters) - U.S. authorities are investigating whether security guards employed by a tech company used state laws to deny legal access to journalists who tried to cover a conference at a Las Vegas casino, a security consultant told Reuters. 2d92ce491b
