On an uploaded photo, how do I change the default thumbnail? I have a brand new site and I see no option to change it. I am using Drupal 6. A: The default thumbnail is generally determined from the filename and has nothing to do with Drupal. You should probably either: Create a module (if you want the functionality available to any user, not just the current admin) Use a browser extension like Pixlr-o-matic to make any user change any uploaded file. A: The default image in a node/article is stored in the filefield_fid value of the field definition of the filefield in question. If you are using the default field type of filefield_managed_file, this is the fid value of the parent file in the managed file hierarchy (like so for image). If the parent file in the managed file hierarchy has a parent file, this would be the fid value of the parent. You could use that as your basis for manipulation. This way, if you upload an image, you could have a check to change the image if a file with that exact name already exists in that directory. A: Have a look at File Exporter module. With it, you can have a list of available images, and select any image from the list as the default image for each node type.
