Press the Windows key + r (to open the run window and type dxdiag) or enter the name of the window in the dxdiag text box (this is not required if the run window is empty). Enter a screen name or title. It can be any words, for example: "MessageBox1", "Mixer1", or "MiXi3". If there is no shortcut for your program in the launch window, type "Start"->"Run". After entering the launch name and starting the program, instead of "dxdiags.dll", a password entry window will appear, which must be entered. In the first field (see Fig. 4.13), enter a password consisting of 8 characters and consisting of English letters, numbers and special characters (this is necessary if the computer does not have a scripting language built into Windows, and this program is launched from the command line). This is necessary because at any time a monitor will be launched on the computer, which will display the result of the program. In the second field, enter the name of a letter or a special character word, which is any combination of letters and numbers. The last field specifies the word you want to replace the word "launch name". It can be just a word, or it can be a word from your program or a program you created. First you need to enter the text, the name of the letter and the special word, and then its name. Then press the "Start" button, which serves to enter the password. Rice.

To enter a new one, you need to open the folder window and delete all unnamed folders. In each directory from among those that were deleted earlier, there should be one folder called "New". When you're done deleting folders, you'll see that when you press the "Menu" button, the start menu will appear, listing all the commands you've previously entered.
