▲ ▼ Keylogging is a feature-rich software that allows you to monitor your keyboard and intercept any input you make on your computer or smartphone. It allows you to copy the text that you type or paste from your keyboard without you noticing it. Keyloggers are also used to steal personal information like passwords and credit card numbers, or to search on the internet for terms related to the information they want to obtain. Keylog monitors the entire computer screen and records the text input, clicks and mouse movements that you make, as well as the contents of your browser tabs, downloads, and even the audio that you hear while you work. You can use Keylog to monitor your kids, parents, spouse, your boss or even other people who are supposed to stay away from your computer! Keylog has been designed to keep you in control at all times and to protect your privacy, as well as that of your children. You can monitor them all while they are on the computer, while they play games, while they are watching movies, etc. You can even record their activity on the computer when they are in another location. Keylog is a highly customizable software solution that you can fully tailor to fit your specific needs.

VoIP simply means Voice over Internet Protocol and, as the name suggests, allows you to make phone calls over the Internet instead of using the regular telephone network. There are several reasons why VoIP has been a subject of constant debate and research in recent years. The important factor is that IP-based phone calls will almost always cost much less than regular phone calls. Moreover, the quality of VoIP calls, although not as excellent as those made through traditional services, is significantly better than the quality of telephone calls made through normal lines. There are several reasons for this - VoIP calls usually travel over much faster networks, as compared to a normal telephone call which requires the switching of voice data through several telephone networks over a certain period of time.
