For more information go to: Wednesday, June 24, 2009 The goal of the study was to evaluate the use of the Raman spectroscopy method in investigating the chemical composition of surface layers of anode material used in the lithium-ion battery. The research was performed by the methods of statistical analysis of mathematical and physical models. In the research has been used the analytical equipment Raman Spectroscopy (RS) and X-ray photoelectron spectroscopy (XPS). A more in-depth study of the influence of the properties of the surface layers of anode material used in the lithium-ion battery was carried out in the investigation of the electrical conductivity and the cyclic stability of the materials. The research was carried out by means of the research technique of statistical analysis of mathematical and physical models. The research equipment used for the study was Raman Spectroscopy (RS) and X-ray photoelectron spectroscopy (XPS). The study of the influence of the properties of surface layers of anode material used in the lithium-ion battery by means of the study of the electrical conductivity and the cyclic stability of the materials has been carried out by the following methods: In the research has been used the analytical equipment Raman Spectroscopy (RS) and X-ray photoelectron spectroscopy (XPS). In the research has been used the analytical equipment Raman Spectroscopy (RS) and X-ray photoelectron spectroscopy (XPS). In the study of the influence of the properties of the surface layers of anode material used in the lithium-ion battery have been used the methods of mathematical analysis of statistical modeling, in which are available a number of standard mathematical models that allow the evaluation of the physical and chemical properties of a selected substance. In the research has been used the analytical equipment Raman Spectroscopy (RS) and X-ray photoelectron spectroscopy (XPS).
