Lipid nanoparticles (NPs) were prepared for neuraminidase (NA) encapsulation to prevent the virus from unloading and inactivate the virus. The NPs were characterized for particle size and zeta potential. NA activity was determined, and the thermodynamic stability of the protein encapsulated in the NPs was also investigated. The in vitro activity of NA-NPs was tested by treating the influenza virus A (H3N2) and B/Florida/04/2006 (B/FLU). Their integrity was checked and their stability were investigated after incubation at 4 °C for up to 30 days. The average particle size of NPs varied from 25 to 35 nm. The zeta potential of NPs changed from -25 mV to -20 mV, whereas the protein-containing NPs showed a negative zeta potential value. The NA activity of the NPs was detected by a hemagglutination inhibition (HI) assay and was determined to be 43 ± 6 U/mg of protein. The NPs showed a higher thermal stability than NA encapsulated in a poly (lactide-co-glycolide) (PLGA) nanoparticle with the same NA activity (27 ± 5.3 U/mg of protein).

NPs were able to protect NA activity after 30-day incubation at 4 °C, whereas the free NA lost its activity after only 30 min of incubation. NPs with the same protein activity can be prepared by a simple process with fewer steps. OHNOES! You have been hovered! You have been hit by a butterfly! MOAR! Does a butterfly leave you feeling happy? For the most part, no. Except for the Valkyries, who loved being hovered by the horseman, and Randolph. Who got a bit more. Randolph got stoned on a Tuesday and redecorated the f30f4ceada
