The very first version of Photoshop was released by Adobe in 1987. It was called Photoshop Basic and was priced at $1,995. And if you want to be truly amazed and enthralled by the power of Photoshop, buy a book on it, because there are many, many books on the market. Painting tools Photoshop has three layers of color and drawing tools: • The black-and-white (grayscale) tool is used to bring up and paint a grayscale image into layers. • The color tool is used to paint colors and hues. • The vector tool is used to draw shapes and letters. This tool is perfect for design work. The pen tools (pen and pencil tools) can be found at the bottom of the workspace, in the Tools panel, where you have access to the option to change the size and line thickness. You can paint a drawing or vector illustration or use the pen tools to add arrows and other shapes to a drawing. Figure 4-3 illustrates a typical Photoshop workspace with the drawing tools at the bottom. Figure 4-3: The drawing tools are at the bottom of the interface. Getting the brush Photoshop offers many types of brushes, such as oil, watercolor, pen and pencil, airbrush, bladed brush, soft round, and more. The user must first select a brush and choose from the Tools panel under Effects. Some tools, such as brush holders, are also available in the Brushes panel (shown in Figure 4-4) on the left side of the menu bar. Figure 4-4 shows the Brushes panel with the Brush options available. Figure 4-4: The Brushes panel has the Brush options available. Saving to file You can save files in one of Photoshop's three formats: TIFF (Tagged Image File Format), JPEG (Joint Photographic Experts Group), and PSD (Photoshop Document). The last of the three is just a subset of the other two and is the format supported in Photoshop for layers. Photoshop allows you to store images on your hard drive in several ways. You can create a new file, attach a photo to an existing file, create a blank layer, attach a new layer to an image, create an adjustment layer, or open a file that was created in another application. In this book, I show you

Q: How do we use the result of a function in an update query in Java I am using Hibernate 3.6. I have the below SQL update query String sql = "UPDATE VOICE_ACTIONS " + "SET " + "PHONE_ACTIONS_VALIDITY = '"+phonInv.getActValidity()+"', " + "PHONE_ACTIONS_SUBSTRATE = '"+phonInv.getActSubstr()+"', " + "PHONE_ACTIONS_VOICE_CALLLOG = '"+phonInv.getActCallLog()+"', " + "PHONE_ACTIONS_NXT_CALL_ID = '"+phonInv.getNxtCallId()+"', " + "PHONE_ACTIONS_NXT_START_DTTM = '"+phonInv.getNxtStartdt()+"'" + "WHERE " + "OBJ_ID = "+phonInv.getOwnerId() ; phonInv.getOwnerId() is an id and is not a reference to the DTO object 'phonInv' I want to put the result of the getActValidity() and so on in the above statement. But instead of "WHERE " I am using "UPDATE VOICE_ACTIONS " How do we bind the result of the getActValidity() or getActSubstr() and so on into the update statement? A: Adding the results of getActValidity() in the Oracle UPDATE query is like inserting the values in the WHERE clause. Hibernate provides in the ORM API (org.hibernate.hql) the org.hibernate.hql.HqlInsert or org.hibernate.hql.HqlUpdate (queries of HQL). The documentation of Hibernate HqlInsert or HqlUpdate says: Insert statements support HQL-style multi-column updates, so you can update multiple columns using comma-separated column names. The inserted values are inserted in the

But given the controversial history of wind farms, is it wise to make the energy most responsible for human-induced climate change even more so? As if wind farms weren't bad enough, the next project is the largest offshore wind farm in the world, so vast that it will be visible from space. Called London Array, the turbines will cover an area that is twice the size of Central Park and will produce enough electricity to power 600,000 homes. Winds even bigger than this one are being built in China, which is the world's leader in offshore wind energy. The latest turbine is a two-megawatt plant on the Yellow Sea that began construction in December 2007. It will generate 1.8 billion kilowatt hours a year, enough to power 300,000 homes. This wind capacity is not idle wind energy or wind turbines being left to rot on their foundations. It is now being sold as a form of electrical power at a slightly lower price, causing New Energy Capital to estimate that the average cost of electricity from the Yellow Sea facility will be $32 a megawatt hour, compared to $30 or $35 a megawatt hour for power from conventional offshore gas turbines, in part because the turbines are more efficient than conventional gas turbines. The plants in China are deployed in remote, mostly unpopulated areas where development is safe and land prices are cheap. Sogatella Energy Ltd., an Australian company, builds similar facilities in the Tasman Sea off the coast of South Australia. Their electricity is competitive with coal-based power. And they may be just one of many such facilities. A wind farm in British Columbia, Canada, that was ready for commissioning recently has a capacity of 1.5 gigawatts. In 2007, Vestas sold a 10-megawatt turbine in the United States for $250,000, but the list price was around $400,000, which is a reasonable price for a turbine for a project of the size of

London Array. "All this is being pushed very hard by wind companies to the offshore market," said Dr. Martin Davidson, director of the National Wind Coordinating Committee. "Wind companies are saying this is where the growth is." "The potential is endless," Matthew Cheung, director of business development for Vestas Wind Systems A/S, said in an interview. Like other wind companies, Vestas is trying to persuade utilities
